Michael Heimlich Murdered Newton Dill Near Columbus.

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 23.—The secret is out. Newton Dill, the Millin township farmer who was found dead in his bedroom, was murdered in cold blood. His slayer was Michael Heimlich, now locked up at the county jail. Mrs. Dill, wife of the dead man, whether or not an accessory, neither protested nor raised a hand against the crime.

Willie Dill, son of the murdered man, tore away the veil of mystery Tuesday afternoon and told how his father was killed. He said that when Heimlich returned to the Dill residence, in a somewhat intoxicated condition, at 11 o'clock last Wednesday night, he entered the house with a large club and went upstairs. While in the hallway leading to the fatal bedroom, Heimlich, the boy says, called to Dill. The latter responded, and getting out of bed, came down into the hall. Heimlich then struck Dill a heavy blow on the head with the club. Dill cried out in agony once, and then, the blows being repeated, he said no more. The boy heard his father fall to the floor. Mrs. Dill then took the children into a bedroom downstairs and shut the door. She did not go upstairs, and did not call Heimlich to stop.

EFFECTIVE MATCHMAKING.

Simple and Direct Method Employed by the Nez Perces Indians.

An old custom was revived by the Nez Perces Indians and their visitors during the celebration on the last Fourth of July, says the Morning Oregonian. The natives of the local tribe are very wealthy people, and there are designing mothers among the aborigines as well as in the different classes of civilized society. The young bucks of the Nez Perces tribe are regarded somewhat like the scions of royalty in matrimonial circles. The maidens from all visiting tribes were brought to Lapwai to find husbands. The customs of the tribes, which were revived for the occasion, were more effective than the Boston man's way.

The marriageable maidens were by common accord quartered in a selected spot in the valley of the Lapwai. At an appointed hour the young men who wanted wives to share their annuities, their homesteads and the affections of their hearts appeared in procession on the hallowed camp ground. The hour was midnight, and the scene was in a grove of trees made fragrant by the wild flowers, and every heart danced to the music of the rippling waters. The young men marched forth, and none but candidates for matrimony joined the march. They were dressed in their brightest colors, and each carried a white willow cane. As they approached the tents they chanted an Indian chorus that was as doleful as the song of the owl, and kept time by beating upon the tents with their canes. The drumming was deafening to the distant spectator and must have been distracting to the waiting maidens in the tents. At last the singing and the drumming had the desired effect.

The maidens came forth, after a delay just long enough to satisfy that universal passion of the mind of a woman to drive a lover mad with doubt. There were more men than maidens. The former kept up the march and the music without. The maidens counter-marched on the line of the same circle, each selecting a husband from the line. The chosen ones hastened to follow their brides away into the darkness. The unfortunate suitors were left to despair.
